Conference Theme: Responsible Management: Challenges & Opportunities

Submission Deadline: January 10, 2021

From a global health pandemic to racial injustice, the year 2020 has brought forward unprecedented challenges for both organizations and management education. These evolving public health and societal events highlight the importance of responsible leadership more than ever before. While responsible management/leadership and Principles of Responsible Management Education (PRME) have been increasingly incorporated into management education, the rapidly changing world in which we live presents the need to continuously frame and reframe responsible management/leadership, responsible management education, and research into organizational social responsibility. Among the questions we need to address are; What are the skills/abilities required for engaging in responsible leadership? Why are some companies more responsive to global problems than others? How should we teach our students to be sensitive to global issues that they do not experience first-hand? What can business schools do to develop socially relevant and responsive mindsets? What is the role of entrepreneurship in responsible leadership? How do organizational structures, cultures, and identities help or hinder responsible management? The EAM community will explore these and other management issues in research, teaching, and learning.

During the unprecedented times, we are working diligently to plan a safe and convenient conference for 2021. The EAM Board is working closely with various stakeholders to decide whether we will have a physical, a hybrid or a virtual meeting. More details on location will be announced soon.

EAM is a learning community of college educators and scholars devoted to members' professional development as well as the advancement of management theory, research, education, and practice. Affiliated with the Academy of Management, we augment and complement AOM's activities by conducting our own domestic and international meetings.
